Insights into Paediatric Acute Respiratory Distress Syndrome (PARDS) through a Regional Research Network

DATE: 30 OCT 20

TIME: 12PM - 1PM

VENUE: Zoom

Abstract

There is a paucity of data in epidemiology and outcomes of children with pediatric acute respiratory distress syndrome (PARDS) in Asia. Over the past 4 years, Dr Lee and his team embarked on the vision of establishing a pediatric critical care network in Asia by undertaking a thematic research path that focused on PARDS. Building on preliminary data from a single site setting, they established the Pediatric Acute & Critical Care Asian Network (PACCMAN) to conduct the first multinational PARDS study in Asia. This was the first multicenter study to validate the Pediatric Acute Lung Injury Consensus Conference's (PALICC's) PARDS definition. Using these data, they were able to examine ventilator strategies utilized in children with PARDS and identify potential areas for improvement in the region. Through PACCMAN, they aim to continue sustainable regional research work to optimize outcomes in these children.
