

Infectious Diseases Research Institute Seminar Series

“Lessons Learned from Twenty Years with S. aureus”

This presentation will feature key discoveries arising from two decades of research into S. aureus bacteraemia, and how these discoveries have changed standard of care.

Date: Friday, 18 May 2018
Time: 09:00 - 10:00 AM
Venue: Seminar Room L1-S2, Level 1,
Academia
Light Breakfast will be served.

Kindly register your interest by emailing your name, affiliation & contact to simi.issac@duke-nus.edu.sg

Speaker

Dr. Vance G. Fowler, Jr. (MD,MHS); is a professor of Medicine with tenure with the Dept. of Medicine & Dept. of Molecular Genetics & Microbiology at Duke University & a member of the Duke Clinical Research Institute. He did his M.D at University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill & attained his Medical Residency, M.H.S & Fellow in Medicine & Infectious Diseases at Duke University.

Dr. Fowler's research in S. aureus & antibacterial resistance has led to more than 20 years (1999-2021) of continuous NIH funding as PI.

Areas of expertise:

- Determinants of Outcome in Patients with S.aureus bacteraemia
- Pathogenesis of Bacterial Infections
- Infections due to Resistant Gram Positive Organisms
- Tropical medicine/International Health